You will be teaching English as a foreign language in two village primary schools in the Marangu area, and teaching any extra-curricular activities of your choice – such as sport, art, music, drama. The children of Kilimanjaro are very bright and very keen to learn.

Katy Allen set up the charity in 1994 and lived in Mshiri village teaching in the primary schools. The charity’s main work is renovating school buildings, but it is important to give help with the teaching of English to ensure that the children gain a good foundation.

The Teaching Project is small and specifically focused, and the staff, pupils and villagers want it to continue and expand. Training will prepare you for planning and giving your lessons, and there are people on hand to help with any difficulties.

You will learn to be more independent and resourceful, and you will be kept active walking to and from your schools in the beautiful countryside of the mountain slopes.

You will accompany pupils on an outing to a National Park and to the Indian Ocean. In the school holidays there is the chance for travel to Zanzibar or to climb the mountain or to venture further afield.

You will be living in rented houses in Mshiri village sharing with other student teachers. You will be part of the community, and can enter into village life, and shop at the local market and cook using local foods and village cooking equipment. You could join the local church choir, or just attend to hear their wonderful music, or try playing football with a local team.

UK training is for two weeks in November/December. The teaching in Kilimanjaro begins in January and continues until August/September
